

The warmest of all possible welcomes to issue four of DOG-EAR, the magazine that is also a bookmark.

There's a feast of creativity here, so tuck right in – but don't forget to visit dogear.co.uk for a treasure-trove of work submitted by a magical menagerie of extremely talented writers, poets, designers and artists.

Exciting things have been happening in the world of DOG-EAR recently. First up, our website has had the digital equivalent of a mum lovingly rubbing a smudge off her chubby child's face. We've spruced up the site with lots of new features – including, amongst many other cyber-delights, the option to download all the past issues of DOG-EAR as handy PDFs. It's like a tiny micro-magazine time-machine, and all you need to power it is a printer and the ability to fold. So whether you've never heard of the magazine before (shame on you), or if you're a die-hard fan who's missing an issue, make sure to get your greedy fingers on all the wonderful words and pictures that we've printed previously.

In other news, we're going international! We happened to discover that the name of the magazine translates into other languages in a peculiarly charming way – the 'ear' part remains, but the animal aspect varies. In German, for example, it's 'eselshor' (donkey ear). Being the geeks we are, this made us very excited, and a few chin-wags later, we're about to launch a Berlin-based, German-language version of the magazine. And we're not stopping there – so if you're interested in helping us expand the DOG-EAR empire over-seas, please get in touch at hello@dogear.co.uk. We're very friendly, we promise.

Enjoy the issue you sexy bookworms (and don't forget, send us your work!)

TOO LATE

she sits on the toilet
i'm taking
a bath
she asks me
is there a future for us requests
i don't piss
in the water
as she'd like
to get in

i tell her
it's too late

Mr Black

CLOSER AND LESS IRRITABLE

Like stubble on shaven genitalia take the rough with the smooth in those simple moments of pleasure

Babes,
I'm a suicide case suited to you and unpacked I found the light lit with a match struck off the inside of your thighs
and the outside of my face
-graze graced
we have that spark
that sandpaper charm

and it's a true flame
not a lighter, perfect photo finish or electric heater

just real unphotoshopped people ugly in places
but smoothed out rubbed down and repainted
in our own time

let's go on holiday somewhere shit

so we can reminisce
about the good times
rather than try to recreate them without realising we distil nostalgia to be bottled up and aged lying-in beds made only to be unmade by making

not a vivid memory,
just a contribution to the bank to something worth saving up for that feeling
that we're happy.

Unbuckle your bra strap and I won't wear socks to bed and we'll feel sexy for the effort even though

we're probably not.

And I'll kiss you then snore
like a trumpet playing an ode to us us happy unperfect perfectly happy us

James Wheale

I AM YOUR FEAR

Marianna Madriz

A PUCK-A-LIPS

If the world ended
I would have nothing to confess.
Instead, in those fleeting moments before death,
I would turn to you and ask
"Sex?"

HAIKU FOR

the man in the seat in front of me, BA flight 1463, Edinburgh to Heathrow, 31 August 2012

you put your seat back
as soon as we've taken off I learn about you

HSBC BOY

i really don't know how to tell you
that i have to stop myself from
thinking about you,
mostly at night.
You seem to work the
days i go in,
and you look at me
everytime -
and its like wtf am i supposed to do i play it cool, too cool and look at you
like i look at everyone
else,
which is so bad because you're not
everyone else,
and by the time i
withdraw cash
you're sitting down in your booth
talking to somebody
whose just
moved into London.

THE AMOUNT OF SUGAR

Over time I've been gradually reducing
the amount of sugar
I put in your tea.
I think you're getting
fat but can't bear
to tell you. This is my way of helping you control your weight.
